Resolutions of School Board.

Resolutions of respect for the late W. A. Burgoon, formerly superintendent of the public schools, have been drawn up by the Gettysburg School Board. I. L. Taylor was appointed at a recent meeting to draft them. They follow:

Whereas, On the morning of December 10, 1915, the Messenger of Death entered our schools and summoned from time to eternity our principal, Prof. W. A. Burgoon, thereby removing from us one whose example and counsel have always been for good, and whose deeds, as well as his words, influenced his pupils for a higher and nobler manhood, be it therefore,

Resolved, That in the death of Prof. Burgoon we lose a worthy leader, a faithful teacher, and a wise counselor.

Prof. Burgoon's life, his teaching, and his influence will be a monument that will always keep his name burning in the homes and the hearts of his pupils, kindred, and friends. The memory of his life will ever be an inspiration.

We mourn with his widow and children, and his friends, and we do hereby extend to them our sincere and heartfelt sympathy in this dark hour of their great affliction.

A copy of this small tribute to his memory will be sent to his family, and a copy be made on our records.

Resolutions.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Methodist Sunday School last Sunday morning, Dec. 12, 1915:

Whereas, Our Heavenly Father, in His infinite wisdom, has seen fit to call from our midst, and from faithful and efficient service in His cause among us, unto Himself and His Heavenly Home with its unspeakable glories and the crown of life which have awaited him, our friend and brother, our superintendent, Willis Archer Burgoon; and

Whereas, Professor Burgoon, in spite of the weight of his duties as Principal of the Gettysburg High School and Superintendent of the Public Schools of Gettysburg, in which positions he served the people of Gettysburg for six years with unusual success and distinction, has been willing and glad to serve the cause of Christ and his church in the position of Superintendent of this Sunday School, to which he has ever given during his nearly two years' term of office the very best thought, service, and guidance, to the very limit of his strength, during his many months of heroic combat with physical weakness and infirmity; and

Whereas, During his superintendency our Sabbath School has enjoyed to an unsurpassed extent the blessings of God in attendance, interest, purpose and efficiency; and

Whereas, He was superintendent of this school on the morning of December 10, 1915, when his Heavenly Father called him home, be it

Resolved, That we the members of the Sunday School Board, and members of the Methodist Episcopal Sunday School of Gettysburg, Pa., express our deep sorrow because of his death, our profound sympathy (beyond the power of words to measure) with all the members of his bereaved family, nearly all of whom are faithful members of our Sunday School, and our sincere appreciation of the great value to us of the influence of his life and example, his valuable services as superintendent, and his whole-souled interest and love of the work, and the value of his advice and counsel even when his health would not permit a more active participation in the work; and throughout it all, his good judgment, tact, uniform kindness, and ready sympathy, and the transparent reality of his Christian character. And be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the Sunday School Board; and that a copy be given to the bereaved family.

Last Court of Judge Swope.

The last court at which Judge S. McC. Swope presided was held on last Saturday, and was a short session.

John D. Keith, Esq., on behalf of the Attorney General, petitioned the Court to reinstate the old charter of the East Berlin Railroad thus adding a new situation to the troublesome course of events of this road. In May 1914, Wm. D. Himes of New Oxford was appointed receiver of the road. In August 1914, the receiver sold the franchises and property to Wm. G. Leas for $10000 who reorganized under name of the East Berlin Railroad Company. Later this company discontinued operating the road and an unsuccessful effort was made by citizens of East Berlin to compel Mr. Leas to operate. Then came the movement to the Attorney General to forfeit the charter and it was revoked. The tracks between East Berlin and Abbottstown were torn up and the portion of the road between Abbottstown and Berlin Junction was sold to a citizen's committee for $8000. Then came the effort for a new company to be allowed to rebuild the road with grade crossings and a refusal from the Public Service Commission. The citizens were ready then to abandon all efforts to put life in the road but the new turn of reinstating the old charter will allow the crossings at grade and permit the operation of the line in the same manner as it has been run.

Judge Swope made order reinstating the road and it is said that steps will be taken at an early date to make the road a going concern.

William Callahan, an umbrella mender charged with begging, was brought before the Court for sentence and with the remark by Judge Swope, "This is the last act of our official career, let us make it a merciful one," the Court gave the prisoner a reprimand and on his promise to try and secure work he was allowed to go. He had been guilty of begging in Gettysburg and with the alms loaded up with liquor.

The sale by the receivers of 120 acres of farm land in Cumberland township to T. Marshall Mehring for $4350, was confirmed. Prothonotary Mehring has lived many years on the farm.

Court adjourned until Monday, January 3rd, when President Judge-elect D. P. McPherson will be read and he enters upon his term of ten years as the President Judge of the 51st Judicial District.

Winfield G. Horner of the Catalpa Poultry Farm near Round Top, won five places with his Rhode Island Red chickens at the poultry show held in Uniontown last week. There were sixty-eight birds in this class and the ones from the Catalpa Farm won second, third, fourth, sixth, and seventh, the pen which won first at the local show winning second at Uniontown.

The Day of Wonders

A Christmas Story

By Mabel Gertrude Rogers

Copyright, 1915, by American Press Association.

THE head nurse, thinking she heard some one sobbing, paused abruptly in the snowy path in front of the infirmary. Darkness reigned, except for the twinkling lights in the bathrooms of the low, open buildings which constituted the Clearfield sanitarium.

She listened. The sound seemed to come from the children's shack, and she turned her steps hurriedly in that direction.

"Some poor homesick kiddie," she thought. "And Christmas eve, too!"

She opened the door and then went in softly between the two rows of little white beds. She could distinguish in the dimly starlit gloom the children's Christmas tree in one corner laden with all the gifts they had received from home. Everything seemed in order. It was after 9, and the children were asleep. As she reached the other end of the tiny ward, however, she came to an empty bed.

"It's Ann Wetherly's bed," she murmured. "I wonder if she's sick."

She smoothed the tumbled bedclothing and hastened out into the hall which led to the other rooms. At the dressing room door she paused. It was slightly ajar, but she heard no sound. She pushed it open softly.

There, huddled on the only chair in the room, directly under the brilliant light, was a little heaving figure, her face buried in her hands, a blanket half covering her worn nightgown.

"Ann?" Miss Morgan spoke her name gently.

The child started and raised wide solemn eyes set in a flushed and tear-stained face, then quickly turned away.

The glimpse she caught of the sorrowful face touched the instinctive mother heart of the head nurse.

"You poor little Ann!" she exclaimed softly, and, dropping on the floor beside the chair, she drew the quivering little form into her lap.

At this unlooked-for tenderness the child's sobs broke forth again. Miss Morgan did not speak, but wrapped the blanket carefully around the little figure, and tears of sympathy for the lonely orphan filled her eyes.

The new nurse whom she had been forced to reprimand sternly that day for carelessness and neglect would have been amazed to see the "dignified head nurse" sitting on the floor with a child clasped in her arms, her cap awry and her soft hair mingling with Ann's tangled black locks. People seldom saw her professional dignity unobscured as much as this. Only Dr. Gray, the young resident physician who was eagerly working and learning and waiting for the day when he could make a home for the "dearest girl in the world," would not have been astonished at the picture.

Gradually the child's sobbing ceased.

"Ann," Miss Morgan coaxed, "sit up, dear, and tell me what you're crying about."

Ann made no reply.

"And on Christmas eve, too?"

The little figure stiffened and looked up with indignant eyes.

"It ain't Christmas eve for me!" she burst out in shrill childish pain.

The head nurse was bewildered.

"Why, it's Christmas eve for every body! And there's your pretty tree in the ward!"

"It ain't my tree," fiercely, "and there ain't no single thing on it for me!" Ann's words came between sobs.

"Well," Miss Morgan consoled her, "maybe Santa Claus hasn't put your gifts on yet."

"But Santa Claus is jest yer folks—and mine—never—sent even a card!"

Miss Morgan rocked back and forth as though hushing a baby.

"They may send something tomorrow," she ventured, resolving that at least tomorrow would find something on the tree bearing Ann's name.

"No, they won't. I wouldn't mind so much only—everybody else is getting things—and—I don't want 'em to think my brothers don't care."

"Of course they care," the head nurse tried to comfort her.

"I wanted to send them a lot o' things," the child continued drearily, "but 'course I couldn't. So I sent each o' the boys a 'two for five' postcard. The man had some beautiful ones for 5 cents—her face lighted up at the remembrance—but I only had 10 cents, and that wouldn't a left any for stamps."

Miss Morgan smiled sympathetically. It had not been many years since postcards and plenty of stamps had been a luxury to her.

"Are your brothers in trouble?" she asked abruptly, noticing a crumpled letter in the child's hand.

Ann's face darkened. Yes, Sam's lost his job, and one of George's babies is sick, and they can't pay my board here any longer, so I got to go home as soon's my week's up, and that's day after tomorrow."

She began sobbing again despairingly. "And it's so nice here."

she wailed: "so much nicer 'n I'll be where I got to go."

"Where have you got to go?" questioned Miss Morgan wonderingly.

"Won't you live with your brothers?"

"Oh, no; I can't stay there! George's folks have got so many children, and Sam's wife is 'fraid o' me 'cause I cough—and—she hesitated and buried her face in her hands, revealing the climax in a muffled voice—"they're going to send me to a home—a HOME!"

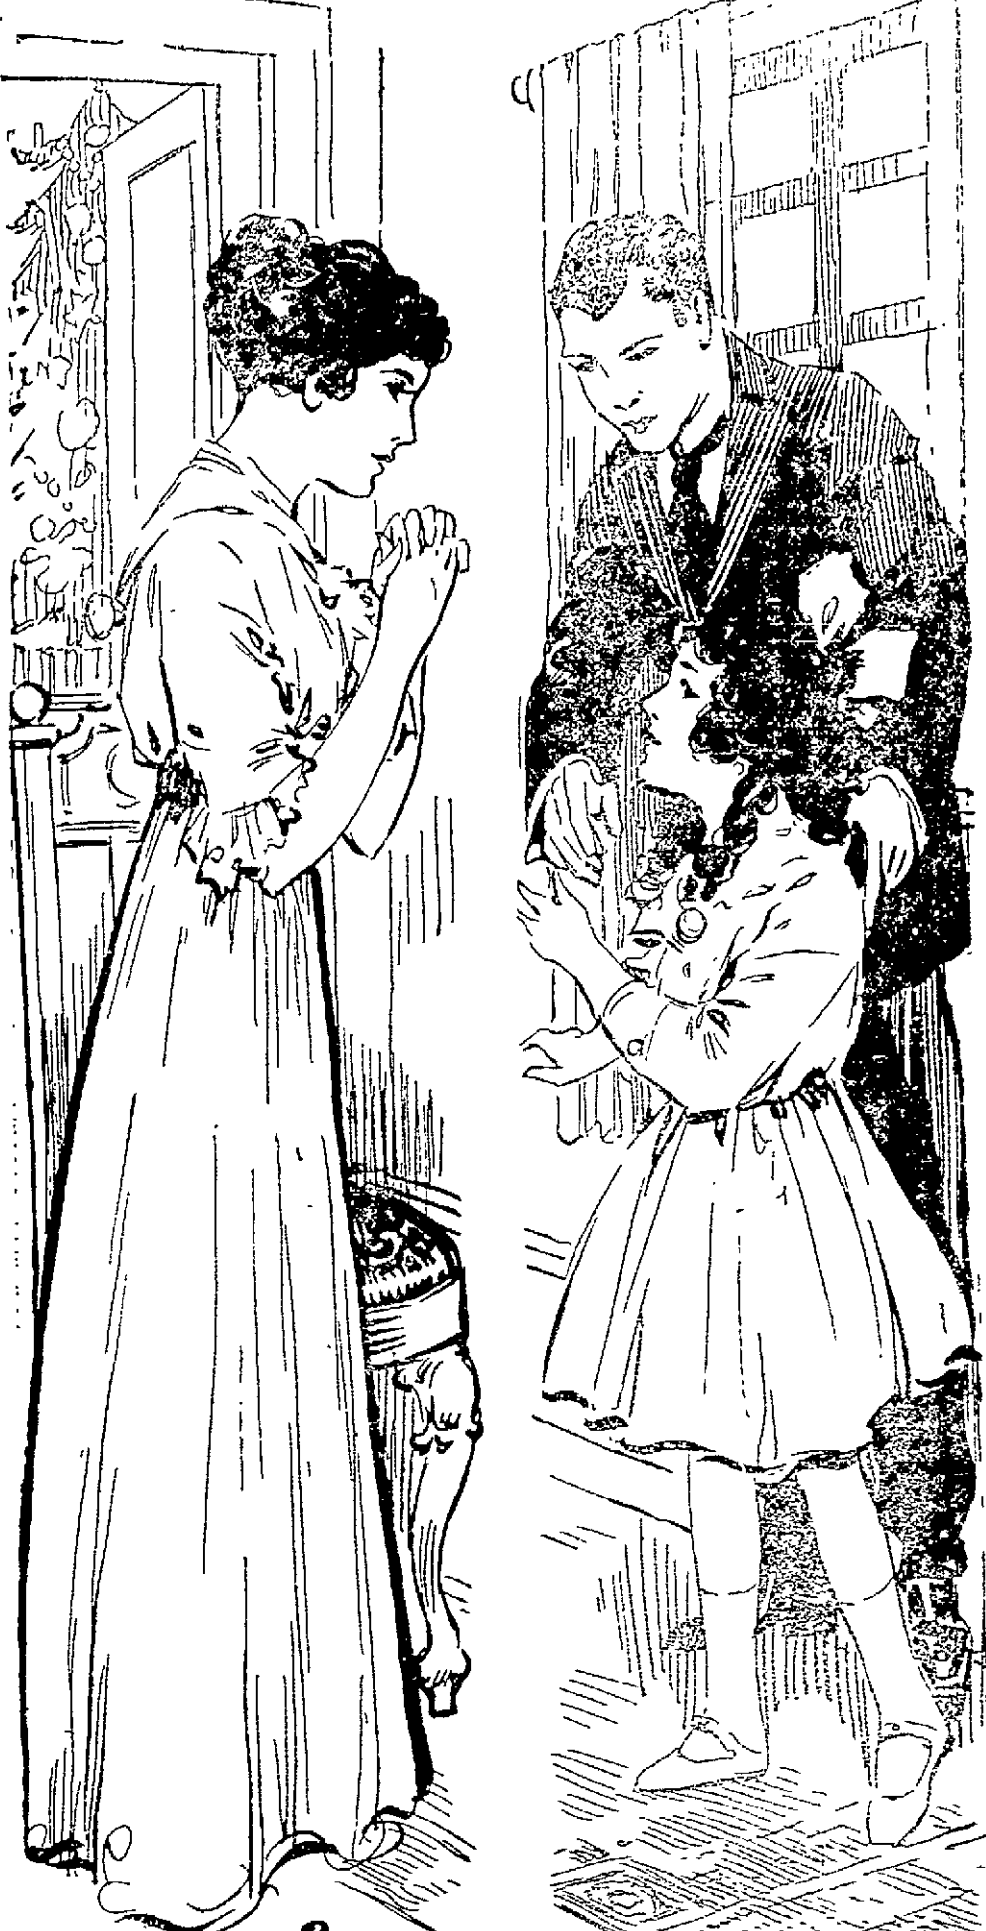

She paused a moment, then continued passionately. "And I'd work for 'em—I'd scrub or take care o' babies or anything—if they only wouldn't send me there!"

The head nurse drew Ann closer and smoothed her tumbled hair silently, comfortingly, until she became quiet. Ann was not a child to be comforted by the promise of a new toy. Her large dark eyes, too solemn by far for her years, seemed to say to the world that she had been robbed of her childish rights, and this little bit of "loving" from the head nurse was the one thing of all things that she most needed. Exhausted by so much sobbing, she nestled down wearily under the soothing touch, and her lids began to droop.

"Come, dear," Miss Morgan said presently, half raising the child: "you must go to bed now and get rested. Tomorrow I'll come over to see you again."

As she passed through the hall, taking Ann back to the ward, she encountered the night nurse and Dr. Gray and asked them to wait a moment. She looked Ann in sadly with a whispered "Good night, dear," and straightened her cap as she hurried back into the hall.

"Will any stores in the village be the "doing" involved the sacrifice of a long-wished-for set of furs.

She would pay Ann's board herself for two weeks longer, she had decided, and bring all the sunshine she could into the child's life. She could at least give her the memory of two happy weeks, and in the meantime she would try to teach her that real happiness lies more with ourselves than with the things around us—a lesson which experience had taught her.

The next morning—a sparkling Christmas morning—while the children were all at breakfast, the head nurse went to the office for the things she had ordered earlier and hurried to the children's shack, where Miss Ford was already busy fastening slips of paper with Ann's name on to the various articles in her lap.

"Merry Christmas!" cried the night nurse. "See all of Ann's gifts! The nurses were all anxious to send something."

They had indeed been generous. There were books, handkerchiefs, ribbons, candy, a pretty knitted cap and several cards of greeting. When Miss Morgan's package was opened, however, came the crowning glory—a beautiful blue eyed doll dressed in white and some warm red slippers with fur around the tops. They arranged the gifts on the tree, working until the sounds of merry voices sent them scurrying out into the hall as the children came in the front way. The conspirators wanted to see, but not be seen.

The superintendent had given the children permission to stay in doors all day.

"I got this letter from the board this morning," Dr. Williams has resigned, and they've offered me the position of superintendent—a hundred a month to begin with and everything furnished us!"

Christmas morning, and they came in with a rush of happy anticipation, flocking around their tree and lovingly fingering the treasures.

The two watchers noticed Ann's somber face as she went slowly to her bed and began spreading it up. These joys were not for her. No one sent things to her. She was going to a home in a few days.

There was a commotion around the Christmas tree.

"Oh," a shrill little voice cried, "where did that beautiful doll come from? It wasn't here before!"

They all gathered around while she held it up.

"Why, it's for Ann Wetherly!" she exclaimed, looking at the slip pinned to the doll's sleeve. She ran over to Ann and held it out.

"Take it quick, Ann!" she cried.

ply. "It's such a dear little cottage!"

He came closer with outstretched arms, but stopped abruptly as she pointed again to the half-open door.

"Hanz! It all!" he muttered. "I wish you weren't the head nurse!"

"We might go for a sleigh ride this afternoon," she suggested demurely. "Now, come on and peep in at Ann. She's so happy."

They went over to the door and looked in. Ann sat on the edge of her bed caressing the "dear, beautiful doll."

The two gazed at her silently; then suddenly Gertrude Morgan raised her eyes to the face beside her.

"Oh, Herbert, do you think 'could we'—"

Dr. Gray squared his broad shoulders. Her meaning came in a flash.

"Yes, we can, and we will if you want to. Of course," she hesitated—"maybe we couldn't have so many other things if we had her!"

"No, but we'll have love, and it would be too bad not to give that little starved soul a share of it."

"Ann," Miss Morgan questioned abruptly, "how would you like to live with us for awhile?"

Ann looked from one to the other dazedly. "Live with you! Where? Oh, you're joking!" she said slowly.

"No; she means it," interjected Dr. Gray. "We're going to live in the superintendent's cottage."

"Oh, I see!" the child nodded wisely. "You two are going to get married. But nobody wants me—not even!"

Miss Morgan interrupted her blithering. "Yes, we do want you," drawing the child to her, "and you're going to live with us, and when you get well enough you can go to school."

A change came over Ann's face. Flinging her arms around Miss Morgan, she breathed:

"What a wonderful, wonderful day! And to think that yesterday—I thought nobody cared!"

"What a beautiful Christmas gift!" she breathed softly, smiling at his confident "us."

"They want me to begin the first of the year. The superintendent's cottage will be vacant then. Do you suppose—would it be too soon?"

Miss Morgan's mind flew back over the two long years they had waited.

"I'll be ready," she murmured happily.

Promoted for Merit.
The State Highway Department recently announced a number of changes. W. R. Wolfers, engineer in charge of the Adams, Franklin, Cumberland and Fulton District, has been promoted to the 12th District, and W. S. Hamaker, county superintendent of Cumberland county, is promoted to the post of acting assistant engineer in the district with headquarters at Chambersburg. The efficient work of William B. Flemming, general foreman in Adams county, has been recognized and he has been advanced to the superintendency of Adams and Cumberland counties. The State Highway Commissioner declares "the new positions have been filled by promotion on the merit system."

Get Back Money Paid for Bonds.
E. E. Heindel, charged in 1912 with W. C. Riffert, with false pretense in selling to six Adams county persons bonds of an electric railroad which, it is said, did not exist, has settled the claims against him by paying back the amounts received at that time, and also the costs in the cases. W. C. Riffert made settlement in November 1913. Heindel has been in Ohio and Missouri and was located somewhat recently. The six defendants who had purchased an aggregate of $7000 in bonds were Noah W. Sell, East Berlin, Allen J. March, Louis S. Wolf, Elizabeth Wolf, of Abbottstown, J. H. Dutta and Dr. W. R. Snyder, New Oxford.

ARCHONITIS, CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, COLIC, BRUISES, ETC.

From a Minister of the Gospel, who has seen this remedy used in many cases, I can say that it is a most effective remedy, which I used with great success.

From a lady in Maryland, who used this medicine three or four times, and it saved me from ending my days with consumption. There was a time when I was nearly dead, and I was told that I was a hopeless case. I tried many remedies, but none did me any good. I then tried Wilson's Remedy, and it saved my life.

If you are suffering from ANY kind of throat trouble it is your duty to investigate. Send for a free trial, and you will be cured.
